Holiday Lights

What you need

- Candy Kisses (ten per strand of five lights - silver wrappers work best)
- Colored plastic wrap or cellophane
- Green-colored cording/string (18" - 24" strands)
- Green tape

Fairly simple candy kisses light up this holiday "necklace."

How to make it

Cut colored plastic wrap into three-inch squares. Cut string/cording to length (18 to 24 inches). Using the cut sheets, take two candy kisses and hold them "bottom to bottom." Place one of the points of the kisses into the center of the plastic square. Wrap the plastic up and around the kisses such that all the excess is gathered at the opposite pointed end.

Twist the excess plastic until it is tight around the kisses. Now tie the string around the excess plastic. Next, take a piece of tape and wrap it around the excess and the string so that the string comes out the "top." (This is the end away from the kisses.) Trim off any excess plastic sticking out of the top.

At this point, what you should have is something that looks like a Christmas light. To continue, repeat the above steps for each (four more times in this example), spacing them out along the string to form a chain of "lights."

Hang your lights by the string as a decoration or tie the ends together to wear as a necklace.
